Mr. Bissell described at some length the line that he wished to have maintained in dealing with the Department of State on [redacted] overflight missions. He said that the overlays Mr. Herter was to be shown should be emphasized as illustrative only, and that the fact that the [redacted] decided to accept them as drawn was a coincidence and that the [redacted] retained the initiative in determining routes. It should be emphasized in all such briefings to the Department that we are simply informing them of what the [redacted] are intending to do. In the future, discussions with the Department of State should be confined to targets and sectors only, without providing actual route information.

5. Zoom-Climb Tests - Although these tests are scheduled to start on 8 December, [REDACTED] noted that for a variety of reasons, largely having to do with scheduling and money problems, there might be a delay in the start of the tests. If the tests are delayed past the 8 December date, [REDACTED] recommended that they be delayed until after Christmas in order to avoid having a break in the continuity of the tests. He said he would know by 5 December whether or not the tests will proceed on schedule. Mr. Bissell noted that if the only problem turned out to be money that we should volunteer to take up the slack if this was administratively possible.
